

About ShoeBox Recycling:

What is ShoeBox Recycling? The concept is a straightforward one.

Fact #1: The average home is filled with shoes that are either not regularly used for a number of reasons: they no longer fit well, they're not in-style, or they just aren't wanted any longer.

Fact #2: Each year, more than 300 million pairs of reusable shoes end up in landfills.

ShoeBox Recycling is a for-profit business that brokers with non-profit organizations around the country to collect gently worn, unused and unwanted shoes and provide them to people around the world in need of shoes. The donated shoes are provided free of cost or at an affordable price in developing countries. Because of the company's for-profit status, they are able to purchase shoes from a wide array of community partners which they otherwise would not be able to.

Non-profit groups like KNAB participate by encouraging the community to discard unwanted shoes. Once the collection boxes are shipped to ShoeBox Recycling, the participating non-profit group is paid a weight-based sum.

The result is multi-fold: The non-profit organization derives a financial benefit, the local community is enlightened and educated about the importance of recycling something that is otherwise likely taken for granted and discarded, underprivileged communities around the world have shoes to wear, and our landfills are freed of millions of pairs of usable but unwanted shoes. It's a win for all.

In addition, ShoeBox Recycling employs social media and its ability to track the donated shoes. Recyclers can leave messages to a future owner or "SoleMate". It's a unique concept of creating a pen pal-style connection between recycler and recipient that can help to change a perspective on recycling. ShoeBox Recycling allows the recycler to actually track their recycled shoes all the way to the person it benefits — and establish a human connection if all goes well.

ShoeBox Recycling has recycled almost 1 million pounds of shoes from all 50 states, generating tens of thousands of SoleMate notes.

Give your gently worn shoes a new life! Donate them today at your child's school!

ShoeBox Recycling provides shoes to those in need in developing countries while also benefiting KNAB, Attleboro Enterprises, Inc., and our environment.
